Heaven and Hell Unveiled: Updates from the World of Spirit Stafford Betty

Heaven and hell--are they real places, or are they fantasies invented to inspire good behavior and overcome our fear of dying? In this book Stafford Betty, a university professor and international expert on afterlife research, attempts to answer these questions. He allows deceased human beings speaking through authentic mediums to describe their actual worlds. They begin by telling us they are not "resting," as Christian theology often asserts. Rather, they live in a world of infinite possibility, and their wills are as free over there as they are here. They are busy beings living in a beautiful but challenging environment, and some are climbing toward higher realms while others are content to stay put--at least for a while. Suffering in the afterworld, not just joy, can be intense; it exists to awaken souls to their errors so they will enter into the happiness of those higher spheres, worlds of brilliant light where corruption can't enter. Professor Betty explores those heavens, those places where love reigns unchecked--as well as those unhappy places where it doesn't. He suggests that the religions we've fashioned here on earth could use an upgrade. They are moons that derive their light from the central sun. This book is about that sun.
