Excerpt:

"You look strained," he said. "Could it... ah." He folded his hands behind his back. "I was right, wasn't I? It was you that brought him here, not the other way around. This is something you need, isn't it?"

I squirmed in the ropes. God, I was wet already. I didn't know whether it was his voice or the way he looked at me, or maybe it was the fact that Paul wasn't here, that I was doing something extra-bad. I knew that if he learned about this, if he even heard a rumour of how a middle-aged man in a vest could get me soaked without even touching me, he'd paddle me raw.

But still, I didn't ask to come down. I simply hung my head and said, "Yes."

Sir Redd walked around behind me. I twisted my head but couldn't see what he was doing. Then he said, "If you want me to stop, if this is wrong, just say. I don't want to hurt you, but I think you want this so badly you can't even say it."

I swallowed hard as he rested a hand on my butt. Then he slipped one finger beneath the waistband of my shorts and ran it over the knobs of my spine. His hand was dry and warm, but I still flinched just from the way it tickled.

Redd stopped. "Do you want me to continue?"

I took a deep breath. "Yes... sir."
